CARBON OFFSETTING

So, you've done a lot to cut carbon emissions for the ball, and you want to know if carbon offsetting can play a part... It's a controversial area, but, done correctly, can be a valuable part of the solution.

The joint-statement on carbon offsetting from WWF, Greenpeace, and Friends of the Earth is supportive but cautious. Basically, you should only use so-called "Gold Standard" certified projects, and definitely don't think that offsetting absolves you of the carbon emissions! Offsetting programmes under the "Gold Standard" scheme do not involve tree-planting, which is generally pretty useless when it comes to going carbon-neutral; rather, they are all about investing in renewable energy projects around the world. The three organisations emphasise that you should strive to cut down emissions as far as possible first, and then use carbon offsetting only as a final step. Offsetting is not the solution, but it can be part of making your ball a little greener - if done properly...

See <http://www.wwf.org.uk/filelibrary/pdf/august06.pdf> for the WWF-Greenpeace-FoE statement.
